Comment on Point Distribution for Local Transportation Projects in Your Area

Citizens are encouraged to help North Carolina take the next step forward to implement the Strategic Transportation Investments law. STI overhauls the way North Carolina funds transportation improvements, allowing NCDOT to make more efficient use of its existing revenues to fund more investments that improve the state's transportation infrastructure, create jobs and help boost the economy.

The law directs each of the department's 14 Transportation Divisions to assign input points to local projects considered important to their area. These points, when combined with a data-driven score, are used in determining the final score for each project on the Regional and Division levels. Projects on the Statewide level are scored using data only.

NCDOT encourages citizens to share their thoughts on the method their local division developed to determine how to assign these points, as well as the number of points the division plans to allot to different types of projects, including highway, aviation, bicycle and pedestrian, ferry, public transportation and rail.

When its 30-day public comment period ends, each division will carefully consider the input received while determining its final point distribution in August. Visit the STI public meetings page to locate the division in which your county resides.
